Our readers will feel that we were much gratified with this expression from one whom we fairly coaxed into prosperity. But this is not an isolated instance. Go to our most prosperous business men in every branch of trade, and you will find that they are those who ad accritise most extensively. Like our friend above quoted, they realize the benilit of a first advertisement, and when the path to fortune is thus unmasked they follow it up with an earnest, steady, unfaltering step, and the much desired end is surely attained. The press is the true car of fortune, and fleet is the progress of all who are wise enough to take passage uponit.
